But Pamplin incumbent defeated

No surprises in town vote here

The governing body of the town of Appomattox did not change as a result of last Tuesday's election. The mayor and members of the town council, running unopposed, were re-elected to office.

Appomattox Mayor Ronald C. Spiggle received 112 votes. He has been mayor since 1980.

Henry W. Conner, retired post office employee and Richard L. Bass of Bass and Milton Construction Co. each received 113 votes, re-electing them to seats on Appomattox's town council.

Robert C. Hubbard was re-elected to a seat on council with 109 votes. The retired salesman for a pharmaceutical company will begin his 10th year as a council member.

Samuel E. Carter, a Babcock and Wilcox supervisors was re-elected with 107 votes. Martin Webb, retired owner of Webb's Tire Company received 106 votes, and Ray Noble, owner of Traveler's Inn Motel was re-elected with 104 votes.

Appomattox has 681 registered voters.

In Pamplin, Patrick F. Harrison was re-elected mayor, running unopposed and receiving 46 votes.

Councilmen Walter R. Lee, Jr., a project planner at Babcock and Wilcox was re-elected to council with 49 votes; Ralph M. Hamlett, manager with Craddock-Terry Shoe Corporation kept his seat on the town's governing body with 39 votes; and T.C. Ligon, retired merchant, was re-elected with 37 votes.

J.A. Williams, former Pamplin Mayor, received a seat on council with 45 votes; Jane Wingfield, retired from the Williams home in Lynchburg, was elected to council with 45 votes, and Esther Price, Amelia Dress Company employee, won a seat on council with 37 votes.

Erma M. Coffin and Margaret Payne were defeated in their bid for seats on Pamplin Town Council. Mrs. Payne was an incumbent.

Approximately 120 Pamplin residents were registered to vote in Tuesday's election.

VIRGINIA'S FIRST LADY, LYNDA ROBB, was honored guest at the dedication of Westvaco's nature trail on Wednesday of last week. She is pictured with, left to right, Watkins M. Abbitt, Jr., Mrs. Robb, Retired congressman Watkins M. Abbitt and Joe Collins of Westvaco. Following the ceremony the group enjoyed lunch at the picnic area of the Buffalo Creek Nature Area. Lynda Robb is guest at ceremony

By FRANCES ABBITT

Virginia's first lady, Lynda Johnson Robb, was guest at the dedication of a new educational trail on Westvaco Corporation's Buffalo Creek Nature Area in Campbell County on Wednesday, May 2.

Lynda Robb, along with natural resource and environmental officials participated in the tree planting ceremony at the head of the trail.

Putting her foot on the shovel as she removed soil from the hole designated for the dogwood tree, she remarked, "Unlike my mother, I don't know the botanical names of flowers and trees, but I do share her love of nature, the trees and flowers and all the beauty that God has given us."

Introducing Virginia's first lady was D.J. Collins, Westvaco Timberlands' Virginia Woodlands manager. In commenting on Westvaco's longstanding commitment to environmental education Collins said, "We recognize that the Buffalo Creek Nature Area offers an excellent opportunity for people to explore, observe, and study the variety of forest types found in this unique and beautiful area. We ask only that those who use it respect this special area and help protect it."

Westvaco's Buffalo Creek Nature Area is on Virginia 24 west of Evington. The area includes two nature trails and a rare six-acre tract of eastern hemlock. This unique stand of hemlock and 31 acres of adjacent hardwood forest within the Buffalo Creek Nature Area has been registered as a Society of American Foresters Natural Area.

Working together cooperatively, Campbell County and Lynchburg Boy Scouts, Lynchburg Parks and Recreation Department, Virginia Division of Parks and Recreation, Virginia Federation of Garden Clubs, The Garden Club of Virginia and the Biology Department of Lynchburg College, completed over three miles of trails and made other improvements.

Since the early 1970's the Buffalo Creek forest area has been used by Westvaco for annual wildflower tours in addition to Boy Scout activities, outdoor classroom field trips for area schools and other environmental education and outdoor recreation activities.

Although the primary objective of Westvaco's forest land ownership is timber production, its multiple use

Macauley gets president's award

By FRANCES ABBITT

Robert Macauley, founder and chief executive of Virginia Fibre Corporation was among the winners of the 1984 President's Volunteer Action Awards on Monday, May 7.

President Ronald Reagan presented the awards for outstanding American volunteer achievement at a White House Luncheon on Monday, May 7.

A 16-hour day at the thriving paper manufacturing company has a New Canaan, Connecticut, he became so concerned about victims of war and strife around the world, he founded Americares.

The Americares Foundation provides relief supplies to countries around the world. An exceptionally keen businessman and a man of persuasive talents, Macauley relied on these qualities and his wide business connections to make possible donations of approximately $12 million in medical supplies to victims of war-torn areas around the world.

It all began in January of 1982, after the Polish government declared martial law and Macauley read that Poles were dying because medicine was so scarce. Macauley decided that something could be done. Many individuals would have considered the obstacles insurmountable, but not Macauley. He didn't have the $75,000 needed to charter a plane nor the drugs to send but that didn't stop him.

According to William S. Slagle, manager of Environmental and Public Affairs with the Virginia Fibre Corporation plant at Riverville in Amherst County, "when Bob Macauley gets an idea, nothing stands in his way of getting action. He is a dynamic man who gets action where other men wouldn't even try."

In March of 1982 a DC-8 and 85,000 pounds of medical supplies and drugs left for Poland. Macauley, known for his outstanding rapport with people, had called pharmaceutical companies, wealthy friends, and fellow businessmen and asked that they donate to Americares.

After reading about the devestation in Lebanon a few months later, he got busy and in August an airlift carrying 97,000 pounds of donated medicine left for Beirut.

The more Macauley did, the more he seemed to want to do. By the end of [illegible] determination to get it done resulted in $5 million worth of medical aid and thousands of lives saved.

For Christmas of 1982, Macauley called on his fellow businessmen in American companies and the result was 80,000 pounds of chocolate candy for Polish children.

In keeping with his belief that the donations should go to those in need and not for office space and high salaried personnel, Americare operates out of one small room in Virginia Fibre's headquarters and the organization has only one full-time paid employee, Terry Tarnowski. Everybody else in the organization is a volunteer worker, including Macauley's wife Lelia and teenage son, Robert Jr.

At Americares there are no bureaucracies, no buildings; everything is donated, including the office, the phone, the drugs, the medical supplies and the volunteers' time.

Before Americares will ship any drugs to a country, two conditions must be met. In the beginning volunteers determine exactly what medicine is needed by visiting the country to question doctors and health officials. Then, Americares has to be sure the medicine will be distributed to the people for whom it is intended and not diverted to the black market of the military.

The purpose of the foundation, according to Macauley, is "to be a pacesetter, rushing essential medicines to crisis areas in hopes that government agencies and other relief agencies will follow its lead."

Macauley spends so much of his money and his time in doing for others, because he believes, "of all the guys in the world, God smiled on me the most, through my wife, and children, my free country and my success in business. I feel I ought to pay some of it back, and this is my way."

In speaking of McCauley, Slagle said, "I think Virginia Fibre is fortunate to have such a dynamic man in the driver's seat. Not only is he successful in the company business but in all he undertakes. He is the kind of man who makes things happen."

For Homemakers

Celebration planned

Virginia Extension Homemakers reached out last year by providing more than $97,000 in community services across the state. They reached more than 385,000 families with educational information.

The week of Sunday, May 6 to Saturday, May 12 has been designated Extension Homemaker Week, when members will look at what they have done and what they will plan for the future, said the president of the state organization, the Virginia Extension Homemakers Council.

"The more than 13,000 individuals who are members of Extension homemakers clubs bring many benefits to their communities," said Ruby Chapman of Ashland.

Virginia Extension Homemakers Council is an organization of more than 730 clubs throughout the state. The members meet to learn the latest information that will help make their lives, their families lives, and their communites better.

It is a community-based organiza-

Corporation is restructured

Burke named to head Cardinal

William A. Burke has been named president and general manager of Cardinal Chevrolet, Inc., in a major reorganization of the Appomattox automobile dealership.

W.E. Jamerson, vice president, and J.B. Drinkard, Jr., secretary-treasurer of Cardinal Chevrolet, made the announcement of the changes in corporate structure and management last week.

In a press release issued last week, Jamerson and Drinkard noted that Cardinal Chevrolet "is happy to have Mr. Burke at the top of this newly formed corporation. Mr. Burke has achieved a very high level of effectiveness in all areas of dealership management in his 17 years' experience with various organizations in this area."

Burke was born and raised in Appomattox County, the son of the late William W. Burke and Mrs. Emily H. Burke.

He was educated in Appomattox County public schools, and graduated with the class of 1964. He is also a graduate of Phillips Business College in Lynchburg.

Burke's career in the automobile business began in a Chevrolet dealership in 1967 in Blackstone. He moved back to his native Appomattox in 1974, and served as a sales finance officer with Central Fidelity Bank for two and a half years in the bank dealer's division in Lynchburg.

In 1976 Burke joined Lawson Ford as

Baseball item: Virginia Tech played Howard University at Blacksburg in a doubleheader ball game. Ere the dust cleared, fifty-nine runs had been scored. The Oakies won 22-16 and 16-10. The floundering New York Yankees should make overtures.

Best item of the week department. Told me as a true experience. A customer stopped at a service station and said was going on a trip and wanted to have everything about the car fresh and in good shape. Would the attendant please let all the old used air out of the tires and put in fresh unused air!

Last week we mentioned a letter from a reader desiring information as to the location of the burial site of one Henry Archer Perdieu. Over the weekend Bro. Alfred (Buster) Moore called to say that he thought he could show the whereabouts of said burial site. Will pass on the information.

Appomattox is not the only favorite tourist spot. Saw Mr. and Mrs. Grover Smith one day recently and they were planning a return trip to the Lancaster - York country in Eastern Pennsylvania.

Checked an 1984 almanac and the predictions were fairly accurate as to the weather we've been having. This month in 1940 Winston Churchill became Britain's Prime Minister.

In a column on fishing in the Richmond Times-Dispatch, the question was debated as to how big is a "whopper?" Meaning often the fish that got away, giving the fisherman the opportunity to stretch the size. Often illustrated as the distance between thumbs when you stretch your arms.

At a local store found plants for yellow tomatoes. Bought a dozen, got them planted in the garden Saturday and they seem to be thriving. Also planted sunflower seed, tall ones and short ones. No information as to my intentions as to watermelons. Julip, the rabbit in residence on Martha Street, has been watching to see if we planted carret seed. Yes, Julip, there is a Santa Claus.

The Religious Herald, Virginia Baptist magazine, had a picture and article reporting that Mrs. Edith Bowes, Alton Church, Dan River Association, has not missed Sunday School in more than twenty-six years.

Note pad memo. How many peaks at the Peaks of Otter, near Bedford? As I remember, three.

All week have been reading a fascinating study on "The Lure of The Unknown" deals with explorers, from ancient times to Admiral Byrd and give major treatment to the controversial life and exploits of Columbus. I like to read.

The local American Legion Post 18 making an all-out effort to have a good attendance at the Memorial Day program in the Court House Square, Sunday, May 27, 2 p.m. Our Congressman, Hon. Dan Daniel, is expected as speaker. Please support this.

Thanks for reading and see ya around.
